I want to tell you a little this month about Sing For Joy’s primary sponsors, the good people at Sukup Manufacturing Company of Sheffield, Iowa. You hear them mentioned by name at the beginning and end of each week’s program; therefore you know that they make grain bins and grain drying equipment for thousands of American farmers. If you happen to be among the many Sing For Joy listeners who do not live in farm country you might not know what grain bins and grain drying equipment look like, much less how they function, but you don’t need to know any of that to appreciate the good work of the Sukups. In addition to making high quality equipment for America’s farmers, their generous sponsorship helps make Sing For Joy a meaningful and beautiful part of each week for thousands of radio listeners all across North America. And Africa too. And they have been doing this now for 20 years. 20 years! Thank you Eugene, Charles, Steve and family, and all of you who work together at Sukup Manufacturing Company.

But I want to tell you more. When curious people ask about the Sukup Company, we at Sing For Joy will often say, “Sukup: it rhymes with cook up.” And we think that is a fitting rhyme – after all, you should just see what they have been able to “cook up” in Haiti to help people rebuild their lives after the earthquake. It turns out that the same engineering and manufacturing that produces a great grain bin can be used to create low cost, easy-to-assemble and perfect-for-the-environment transitional housing for people in Haiti. By making some modifications to the basic galvanized steel grain bin, the same design that works for protecting and maintaining stored grain works for protecting and sheltering needy families. Through a collaboration with Global Compassion Network, these modified grain bins, called Safe T Homes, are being assembled into communities to provide housing and stability to people in Haiti. Sukup staff have made several trips to Haiti with Global Compassion Network to assemble the homes and help build the communities. Do people actually want to live in these Safe T Homes? The answer is an enthusiastic yes. Doesn’t it make you smile?

If you would like to know more about Safe T Homes and the Village of Hope project, go to the Sing For Joy website. (singforjoy.org) There you will find a link to a short article on the Sukup website, and another link to a six minute video presentation on YouTube. It’s a great story.

I no longer remember which of my teachers it was who regularly cautioned students not to let the needs of body and soul fall into competition against each other. Human beings, this teacher reminded us, have both needs, and it does no one any good to squabble over which is greater, or more important. The church’s call is to attend to both. Charles and Steve Sukup and their parents before him learned that lesson without taking classes from my teacher. For 20 years they have gladly sustained the music ministry of Sing For Joy, and now they provide housing for the needy as well. We at Sing For Joy salute them and thank them. Oh . . . and if you’ve wondered what a grain bin looks like, do check out the video. You’ll enjoy it.

Peace be with you,

Universal Love

“Love is universal, known in all languages and among all people. And music is universal. Put the two together and songs about love abound. On Sing For Joy, songs about the universal love of God will put joy in your soul. Listen in.”
